JMS Students Take First Place at National RIT Science Fair

By Jordana Flavin

Parker Holt, Tres Diaz and Isicc Prettypaint took first place at the National RIT Science Fair. Not only were they the youngest entrants there, they were the first team from Utah ever to be picked to make a presentation.

They were up against top Deaf schools in the nation, including the Pennsylvania School for the Deaf and the Arizona School for the Deaf. Top scientific minds from New York to Los Angeles met at the National RIT Science Fair in Rochester, NY to present their projects on topics ranging from "The effects of car exhaust on the lungs" to the "Minute details of photosynthesis".

One of the judges commented on the boys' project, "I was blown away by the clarity of their scientific process. They took a good idea and really ran with it. They should be proud." The boys' project was entitled "Safety Signs." It measured the safety of signing and driving at the same time by comparing it to a lone driver not communicating at the same time. Their research discovered that the fact that many Deaf drivers need to make direct eye contact while communicating, and driving in this way can lead to a greater risk of accidents.

The boys agree that their research should be taken to a higher level and studied further. Parker, Tres and Isicc are unsure about what the future holds for them in science but they do know that they love it. "Science is one of my favorite classes", said Tres, "next to PE." Their coach and 6th grade teacher is Jordana Flavin, a new addition to Jean Massieu School. Her aide is Brad Evertsen. All of them worked very hard to get them to where they are now - winner of the top scientific fair for the Deaf in the nation this year. Utah should be very proud of them. These boys deserve it.

Families Seek Hearing Aid Donations for Needy Kids

Costly: Most health plans don't cover the devices.

By Lisa Rosetta, The Salt Lake Tribune

Posted: 03/01/2009 05:19:01 PM MST

The state's last resort for low-income children with hearing loss is asking Utahns to donate their used hearing aids. Children who don't get the tiny devices right away may not be able to develop speech normally and are more likely to perform poorly in school, said Rich Harward, the Utah Department of Health's Hearing, Speech and Vision Services director.

But hearing aids aren't cheap -- between $1,000 and $3,000, depending on features and power requirements -- and most commercial health insurance plans don't cover them.

To help, the department's Hearing Aid Recycling Program (HARP) collects used devices, sends them to manufacturers to be refurbished and fits them to kids at no cost. The rest are sold for salvage or remain with a manufacturer for credit toward the purchase of new ones.

Many of the families served by the program are low-income but aren't eligible for Medicaid, he said. Or they have coverage through the Children's Health Insurance Program, which doesn't pay for hearing aids.

"These are families who are falling through the cracks," he said.

Most donated adult hearing aids are small enough, he said. "Quite often, the same things you'd put on an 80-year-old are what you put on a 2-year-old," Harward said.

School districts, hospitals and clinics refer the 30 to 40 children who take advantage of the program each year. Kingsly Nana Fabu, whose family moved to Salt Lake City from Cameroon two years ago, was one of them last year. The 7-year-old, who was referred to HARP by his principal, and was able to get a pair of refurbished hearing aids in December at no cost to his family, said his mother, Aline Nana Fabu.

"I'm new here," she said. "I don't know anywhere [else] to go."

About three in 1,000 Utah babies -- or 150 each year -- are born with hearing loss, Harward said. Another three in 1,000 will develop a problem by the time they're in kindergarten.

Harward encourages Utahns to send in their hearing aids even if they don't work. Parts can be salvaged, he said. HARP also accepts other assistive-listening devices, such as FM broadcasting systems, that can be used in classrooms.

Obituaries

February 26, 2009 – Carl Skinner, 94, passed away at home surrounded by those who loved him. Carl Skinner proudly served his country in the European Theatre during World War II in the United States Army. Upon leaving the army, Carl was employed at Mountain Bell where he retired after 41 years of service. He loved to watch the Utah Jazz, liked to go to the cabin especially during hunting seasons to be with his boys. He loved to travel in his motor home across the country, and wintering in Quartzite, Arizona. Among his survivors is Annette Page of Logan.

March 10, 2009 – Jolene Kelley passed away after a valiant battle against cancer - she fought the good fight. She was a daughter of Alfred and Jessie Kelley. She taught school for 36 years at Hannah Holbrook Elementary and two years in the Army Services in Karlsruhe, Germany. She loved teaching and the children she taught. By reputation, she was known as the "hugging teacher" and all the children got hugs and knew how important they were. Funeral services and interment took place in Salt Lake City.

March 19, 2009 - Alice Stokes passed away at the age of 93 in Logan. She taught deaf children in Logan schools. Her first job in the Logan schools was combined with teaching two days a week at the Utah School for the Deaf in Ogden. She, along with other parents of deaf children and with the help of the University and Edith Bowen School, started classes in Logan for deaf children so they could remain at home rather than traveling to distant schools. A memorial service will be held in May at Utah State University. Among her survivors is Susan Stokes of Logan.

SIGN LANGUAGE ACCEPTED AS FOREIGN LANGUAGE FOR AIRLINE POSITION

Adapted from "Silent News" March 1989 – A girl who had worked alongside a deaf girl, Theresa Lynch, in an office of AER Lingus, an Irish airline, wanted to become a flight attendant. Even though the job description stated that fluency in three languages was required and she was fluent in two, she applied for the position. During her interview she asked whether sign language could be considered her third language. After answering many questions in sign. She passed with flying colors and greatly impressed her examiners. She got the flight attendant position thanks to Theresa who had taught her to sign. As a consequence, many other flight attendants in the airline want to learn sign language.

Utah Teams Shine at NWADB

By Shari Bailey

Recently the Utah men and both women's team recently returned from the 2009 NWADB basketball tournament held in Seattle, WA. I am happy to inform you the Utah women's team beat the Utah Eagles to secure their 7th straight regional title! With the help of a great coach, Brad Crowther, the Utah women's team was able to keep the winning streak alive. As some of you may know, there has been a new addition to the team, Abby Moose, from Pennsylvania. Abby, a great guard comes to our team with great basketball experience and the team is excited to have her. Many enjoyed the competition and the opportunity to get to know each other. Both Utah women's teams look forward to playing at Nationals in Anaheim, CA in April. The Utah Eagles team beat the Seattle team twice to play in the championship game. Coach Craig Radford of the Utah Eagles said, "It was a good experience for the girls to learn teamwork and endurance. They played their hearts out!"

Having fought hard in each and every game the Utah men's team took 2nd against the combined American River Deaf Club, ARDC and Bay Area Club of the Deaf, BACD teams. The men did a great job of fighting to the end! If you asked anyone who watched that game, you would find out the Utah team had great sportsmanship, more experience thus more knowledge and worked hard to the end. Several players took hard hits but that didn't faze them and only encouraged them to work harder. We are proud of the men's team and look forward to watching them at Nationals as well.

All three teams would like to thank everyone for their support. Keeping a team together and scheduling practices is hard work and the teams are grateful for wonderful the coaches for their time, Brad Crowther (Utah men's and women's team) and Craig Radford (Utah Eagles). If it wasn't for the coaches, many feel they would not get as far as they have. Cheers to both coaches!

For the Deaf, Talking and Driving don't mix

Experiment: Teens will take findings to a national science fair

By Natalie Dicou, The Salt Lake Tribune

Updated: 03/11/2009 04:00:34 PM MDT

Curious about the impact that using sign language while driving can have on a deaf driver, a group of sixth-graders at Salt Lake City's Jean Massieu School for the Deaf decided to conduct an experiment.

They took turns operating a driver-training simulator while having a conversation with a passenger. Students learned signing and driving can be more dangerous than driving alone.

"A deaf person with a friend in the car typically had more accidents than when alone," said Riverton sixth-grader Tres Diaz through an interpreter.

Diaz, Sandy's Isicc Prettypaint and Daybreak's Parker Holt will take their findings to the Rochester Institute of Technology National Science Fair for Deaf and Hard-of-Hearing Students in New York starting March 20.

At the fair, students will present science projects on a broad range of topics, including deaf issues, and will compete for cash prizes.

"[Tres'] interest in science has really taken off this year," said Minnie Mae Wilding-Diaz, Tres' mom, a deaf woman who has been driving for 14 years and has never gotten into an accident.

"I've kind of had a different result [in my own driving and signing]," said Wilding-Diaz, who uses the rearview mirror to sign to her three deaf children in the back seat. "You have to be careful that you don't drift in your lane."

The students got the idea for their project from their teacher, Jordana Flavin, a hearing person who learned sign language after giving birth to two deaf daughters. Flavin's daughters -- seventh-grader Madeline and fourth-grader Kennedy -- both attend Jean Massieu School for the Deaf.

"I went back [to school] to get my master's so I could learn everything that I could to help them," Flavin said. "That's why I'm teaching here."

Flavin will accompany the boys on their first-ever visit to Rochester, N.Y.

After a few hours of data collecting, the young scientists-in-training let down their hair.

"After the experiment, we let them have as much fun as they wanted," Flavin said. "They would go as fast as they could."

Quiet for most of the interview, Isicc perked up when discussing the post-experiment fun.

"When I was driving, I went like 122," he said through an interpreter, smiling. "There was this fire truck in front of me, and I didn't see it and almost ran into it."

Isicc is still a few years away from getting his own license. In the mean time, he might want to learn a few pointers from Wilding-Diaz, whose perfect driving record when driving and signing is still intact.
